Igor Ya. Grichanov¹ Elena I. Ovsyannikova

Abstract: First records of Dolichopodidae from Orel Region of Russia (Diptera, Empidoidea). – Cesa News 108: 1-5, 4 figs.

First data on Dolichopodidae from the Orel Region of Russia resulting from the short-term visit (July, 2015) are presented. All 16 collected species are firstly recorded for the Region. Light micrographs of key characters of some species are included.

Key words: Diptera, Empidoidea, Dolichopodidae, fauna, Orel Region of Russia, new records.

Introduction

When studying recent Diptera catalogs, I have found that the fauna of the long-legged flies (Dolichopodidae) of Orel Region of Russia remained unstudied (Negrobov et al., 2013; Grichanov, 2014). This paper presents the new records in detail. All 16 collected species are widespread across the Palaearctic Region and common in the central European part of Russia that as a whole may be considered to be comparatively well-studied.

A hand net was used for collecting. Mainly wet localities (except tree trunks Medetera was taken from) were explored. All specimens were dried and mounted on pins and placed in the museum drawers. The following keys were used: Negrobov & Shtakelberg, 1969 (females); Grichanov, 2006, 2007. The collectors of all specimens are the authors of the paper; their names are omitted. Specimens examined in this study are deposited in the authors' collection. The species are illustrated by the senior author with ZEISS Discovery V-12 stereomicroscope and Axio-Cam MRc5 camera. General distribution of species is given after Negrobov et al. (2013) and Grichanov (2014). Type localities are provided, and country lists are arranged alphabetically.

Remarks. Medetera jacula and M. meridionalis Negrobov, 1967 are abundant sister species (or phenotypes of the same species sensu Grichanov, 2002), hardly differing from each other by habitual characters. Checking material in my collection, I have found that the main diagnostic characters of the two species listed and figured by Negrobov (2010) are inappropriate to distinguish them by dry material. The wing venation and the number of dorsocentral bristles on mesonotum are individually variable in both species, whereas the shape of fine microscopic setae on apex of surstyli is obscure on dry specimens. The only reliable and stable diagnostic character is the position of two strong dorsolateral bristles on apex of surstylus (see arrows on Figs. 1-4). The M. jacula males in my collection (from Orel, Pskov and Novosibirsk Regions of Russia and Akmola Region of Kazakhstan) have rather long distance between the two bristles, about as long as the longest bristle (Figs. 1-2). M. meridionalis males (from Rostov Region, Krasnodar and Stavropol Territories, Kabardino-Balkaria and North Ossetia) bear the two bristles more apically on surstylus, having distance between them about half as long as the longest bristle (Figs. 3-4).

Figs. 1-4. Medetera jacula (Fallén, 1823) (1-2) and Medetera meridionalis Negrobov, 1967 (3-4), surstyli, distal part; 1, 3 – lateral view (after Negrobov, 2010); 2 – dorsal view; 4 – dorsolateral view.
